"Queen Anne Hill" was first named "Eden" by Thomas Mercer, who was certain he'd found the Promised Land. Then it was named "Galer Hill" because Jacob Galer + family lived on the hilltop (Galer St.). Later it became known for its "Queen Anne" (18th C. English) architecture, first built by Rev. Daniel Bagley or Herman Chapin. The Kinnear Mansion, demolished in 1959, was an outstanding example. During Prohibition Days

Queen Anne Ave. was known as "Temperance Way" - only a sober man could drive up or down it. In 1898 the 17-degree incline street became known as the "Counterbalance" with the construction of double cable car line up the slope: tunnel under the track in which the 16 ton concrete counterbalance ran for the 21 ton cable car: hauled passengers both directions on each track: open vestibules on each end of car, car operated by conductor and brake/motor man. "Counterbalance" replaced with trackless trolleys in 1940, tracks removed in 1943. (Tunnels filled?)
